1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the
 2. various methods of determining the rate of reaction. It is shown 3. that the most reliable method is the one which involves the 4. measurement of the change in concentration of one of the 5. reactants or products. This method is applicable to all
 6. reactions, and is particularly useful in the case of reactions
 7. which are slow. The rate of reaction can also be determined 8. by measuring the change in pressure, or the change in volume, 9. or the change in color. These methods are only applicable to 10. reactions which involve a change in these properties.

1. The rate of reaction is defined as the change in concentration 2. of one of the reactants or products per unit time. It is
 3. usually expressed in terms of moles per liter per second.

The first of these is the fact that the number of cases of the disease has been increasing steadily since the beginning of the year. This is due to the fact that the disease is highly contagious and is easily spread from person to person.
 The second fact is that the disease is highly fatal and often leads to death within a short time of the onset of the symptoms. This is due to the fact that the disease is caused by a very powerful virus which attacks the lungs and other organs of the body.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods which have been employed for the determination of the rate of reaction between the various components of the system. It is found that the rate of reaction is dependent upon the concentration of the various components, and that the rate of reaction is also dependent upon the temperature of the system.
